Air transportation safety has been one of Packard's primary concerns lately. With two fatals involving commercial airplanes and another involving a small plane, he believes the safety of the airways is of utmost importance.

"There are no more recent than the past, but considering the way things are going, the airways are not safe," Packard said, "But that's not to say that the safety of the airways is not a concern.

Packard's interest in air safety has been sparked by the recent accidents. The two fatals involved commercial airplanes and one involved a small plane. Packard feels that the airlines should be more careful in their operations.

"The airlines have been looking for ways to cut costs and increase profits," Packard said, "But they should not be cutting corners on safety."

Packard also believes that the government should be more involved in ensuring the safety of the airways. "The government should be doing more to ensure that the airlines are operating safely," he said, "But they are not doing enough."

Packard said that he has been working with the Federal Aviation Administration to ensure that the airlines are operating safely. "I have been working with the FAA to make sure that they are doing their job," he said, "But they are not doing enough."

Packard also praised the work of the Transportation Security Administration. "They are doing a great job," he said, "I have been working with them to make sure that they are doing their job."

Deficit spending?

The city of Mission Viejo faces a deficit in its General Fund budget for the fiscal year 2010-11. The city has already cut some services and may need to make further cuts. Do you think the city should raise taxes to cover the deficit?

By Matthew O. Jones

"I would support a tax increase if it means the city can maintain essential services. However, I believe the city should also look for ways to cut unnecessary spending."

College finds money for full schedule

By Bonnie O'Herron

St. Johns University and William Paterson College will have their spring basketball seasons fully funded thanks to a $60,000 grant from the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA). The money will enable both schools to continue their basketball programs for the rest of the academic year.

The grant, which is based on the schools' demonstrated financial need, will cover the cost of operating the basketball programs for the remainder of the academic year. The funds will be used to pay for travel expenses, equipment, and coaching salaries.

The NCAA's grant program is designed to help schools with low revenue from their athletic departments to maintain their programs. The funding is provided to schools that meet certain criteria, including having a low percentage of student-athletes who receive scholarships.

St. Johns University received $36,000 of the grant, while William Paterson College received $24,000. Both schools are grateful for the support and plan to use the funds to continue providing a high-quality basketball experience for their student-athletes.

In addition to the NCAA grant, both schools have received contributions from alumni and other donors to help fund their basketball programs. These contributions have been critical in enabling the schools to continue offering basketball at the varsity level.

FALL PREP PREVIEW: Girls' Volleyball
Youngs may lift Chargers to top of SCL

Mustangs, Hawks have long road ahead in PCL

By D. Rose Patern

For many, fall means football. For a group of girls' athletes, though, it marks the end of swim season and beach volleyball and the beginning of the fall season.

Most area teams will participate in regional pre-season tournaments, which serve as a preliminary range of measuring and station strength, but the South Coast League playoffs will soon give way to non-tourney play for most of the teams.

"It's really the season that really matters—this the last week of September," said South Coast League Coach Elisa Travis.

The South Coast League features teams with strength and depth every year.

One reason the Chargers may improve this season is their experienced senior class.
